COLUMBIA THEATER .- "Carmen," from the very nature of the gypsy heroine and her south Spain surroundings, is a rather caloric subject of which to treat on a summer's evening, but nothing daunted by such conditions, the Arden company at the Columbia this week enters into the four acts of Merrime's well-known story with a vim and enthusiasm which carry the audience right along with the characters through the picturesque and thrilling incldents and arouse the same feeling of keen interest in the front of the house that is so apparent in the work on the stage. It is a truly elaborate and well-pointed production which stamps the efforts of Mr. Arden and his associates as highly praiseworthy, and will send the company away next Saturday evening with unusually pleasant remem-brances on the part of Washington's theater-goers. There was a disposition to criticise last night, but by the time the curtain had fallen on the second act the audience was won over, and the favorite players were called repeatedly before the curtain Those who had doubted the ability to make up a good production of such a play as "Carmen" in the short space of time allotted a stock company from one week's end to another soon lost their fears and settled themselves down to enjoy in fine contentment the evening's entertainment. Mr. Arden is cast in a part which suits him perhaps as well as any he will be able to find in all his stage career. There is such a quiet but forceful intensity to his playing of Don Jose; such strength in the calmness with which he faces his fateful crisis, such a wealth of stored energy, so much left in reserve to admire. His characterization gives the impression that there is even more to Don Jose than is seen upor Girdled by the strong cords of a tragic fate, his yielding is finely reluctant. He develops not only the strength of his own character, but emphasizes to all the irresistible power of the destiny that is beating him ever downward. The force of his playing is keenly felt in the fight between Don Jose and Garcia. Stage duels, as a rule, are not very interesting affairs, and many an otherwise entrancing romantic production has lost much of its impressiveness in the milk-and-water combat. Mr. Arden and Mr. Post have succeeded in preenting a stage fight that really thrills. Much of Mr. Arden's good work was nat-urally expected. The real surprise of the evening was the portrayal of Carmen by Laura Nelson Hall. She delighted her friends and won over many who have been keenly critical of her work in the past. To follow in the footprints of the actresses who have identified themselves with this part might well have made this young woman quake. But she has gone ahead, and relying upon the lines already laid down for her, gives an entirely credit able representation of the role. Jane Holly as Mercedes; Emelie Melville, who did some of the best work of the evening as Zara; Lorrimer Johnstone as Escamillo and Wallace Worsley as the captain complete the main portion of the cast.

pound as Vanilla. Judge Bundy heard several cases today in the Police Court involving alleged violations of the pure food law in the sale of vanilla. Health department representatives purchased bottles of the flavoring on which the word "compound" appeared. It is stated that Prof. Hird found trace of the genuine vanilla bean in very few of the samples submitted.

The informations alleged the sale of vanilla extract for which inferior and cheaper substance had been substituted, either wholly or in part, and being in imitation of and sold under the name of another article Prof. Hird told of the result of his analysis in each case. He informed the court that the word "compound" as printed on the labels means to the average houseseeper that the article is of extra strength. Judge Bundy imposed a fine of $5 in each of several cases, while in others the personal bonds of the defendants were taken. In one instance, where the merchant explained the nature of the article sold, an acquittal resulted. During the trial of the cases Prosecuting Attorney Pugh remarked that the word 'compound" does not protect the dealers.
